The Lay Preacher.

No. II.

"Therefore she took a veil and covered herself."
Genesis xxiv 65.

ALTHOUGH the sacred page of the inspired historian, was certainly devoted to a more important purpose, yet there are many passages that cannot fail to gratify the ear of taste and warm the heart of enthusiasm. Interwoven with the history of the chosen people, and the precepts of their divine teacher, we often find the most beautiful and pathetic episodes. These beauties may be passed over with a careless eye by those who make religion their only study, and whose minds filled with its solemn duties, afford no room for lighter thoughts; but there is no reason why they should be withheld from others who feel inclined to enjoy them. Surely then, while the labourers are gathering the harvest, it will not be deemed indecorous in us to cull the flowers which they pass unheeded. So admirably indeed is this excellent book calculated to direct us in all the various pursuits of life, that it not only contains the sober maxims of piety, but even gives us examples of many of the little courtesies that sweeten our existence.

The marriage of Isaac and Rebecca is full of sweetness and simplicity. "Abraham was old and well stricken in age, and the Lord had blessed Abraham in all things," but neither his advanced age, nor his great prosperity, induced him to neglect his duty as a parent. The evening shades of life had not chilled his affections, nor was his heart hardened by avarice or ambition. His last wish was to secure the happiness of his darling son, by uniting him to a virtuous and an honourable woman. Among his neighbours he might undoubtedly have found many females possessing wealth and beauty, and to whom an alliance with the heir of the respectable and wealthy Abraham, would have been considered as an honour.

But he would not contaminate the pure principles of religion, which he had sedulously instilled into the mind of Isaac, by an union with Canaanitish idolatry and superstition. He knew, also, that there can be no happiness in the married state, without an union of hearts, a similarity of sentiment, and a mutual respect between the parties for each others opinions and principles. "But thou shalt go," said he to his servant, "unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac." The servant, conceiving that his embassy would be attended with difficulty, suggests a doubt of its success, for, said he, "Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land." Little did he know of the impulses of a woman's heart—little did he suspect the enterprising spirit with which a woman undertakes, and the fortitude with which she executes, any plan which affection dictates. But Abraham knew better. He knew that a woman would leave her father and her mother and cleave unto her husband, and that the attractions of a lover awaken new feelings and sympathies, break the fetters of habit, dispel the associations of childhood, and wean her from home, country, and friends.—The sequel proved that the patriarch was right. When his embassador had arrived in Mesopotamia, he halted at a well near the city of Nahor, and, while he rested, Rebecca, the niece of Abraham, drew near. Rebecca was the fairest among the fair; youth and health sparkled in her eye, virtue and loveliness blushed on her cheek. Nor was she less benevolent than beautiful. She exhibited towards the tired stranger the courtesy of good breeding, mingled with the generous & considerate hospitality which so peculiarly belongs to the female breast. She saluted him politely, drew water for him and for his camels, and then invited him to her father's house, where, said she, "we have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in."

A happy result was the consequence of this auspicious meeting; proposals were made and acceded to, & the lovely Rebecca was betrothed to Isaac. Nor did she on this occasion display any of that spirt of coquetry which is said to be the inseparable companion of beauty.—She sought not to enhance her value by squeamish objections, or to prolong the servitude of her lover by unnecessary delay. On the contrary when her conductor proposed to return home, and her parents, both to part with their child, affectionately opposed his wishes and said "let the damsel abide with us a few days"—the friendly controversy was referred to the young lady herself, "and they called Rebecca and said unto her, wilt thou go with this man? and she said, I will go." Oh, what is there half so sweet in life as sincerity! Ye who are constrained by false notions of delicacy to check the impulses of affection—ye who falsely modest would hide the blush of love, or drive from your cheeks the chaste tear of sympathy—ye who will not allow your lips to speak that which your heart is not ashamed to cherish—be tau't by the example of Rebecca! Wear always the vestments of modesty, and let the garments of innocence adorn your persons, but let there be honesty in your hearts and candour upon your lips. That which you intend to give, give it quickly, and what your hearts conceive let your tongues speak freely!

Rebecca had made a solemn engagement, by which she was to transfer to her husband the obedience which hitherto she had paid to her parents. To him all her affections were due, and to his honour and his tenderness she must now look for protection & for happiness. She would not therefore keep him in suspense, or give him any reason to suspect that she was "a sluggard in love." When the cavalcade drew near the residence of Abraham, they encountered Isaac, who had gone out "to meditate in the field at eventide." Indeed, well might he meditate. The connubial bonds are never to be lightly assumed; they are garlands of roses to some, and chains of bitterness to others, and few can predict what shape their own will take. To take a wife therefore, as we sometimes exchange horses, unsight unseen, was rather a hazardous undertaking, and the heart of Isaac would be more likely to tremble with apprehension, than to glow with hope on such an occasion. It was for Rebecca to make a lover of her husband, and to implant ardour and confidence in the place of doubt and fear. She now evinced that on proper occasions, she had a proper sense of delicacy, for when the servant said, "it is my master," "she took a veil and covered herself." Happy! interesting moment! when the youthful pair destined to tread life's path together, first met—and the first kiss of love was imprinted on the lips of beauty! the vows breathed at such a moment, and the ardent hopes that enthusiasm then kindles in the breast, are too often deceptive, & but too often lead to disappointment. But on this occasion Heaven was propitious, and Isaac and Rebecca reached the summit of human bliss, in obtaining what is so universally sought for, and so seldom found, matrimonial felicity. This consummation, so devoutly to be wished, is recorded in the last verse of the chapter from which we take our text, and where we are told that Isaac "took Rebecca and she became his wife; and he loved her; & Isaac was comforted after his mother's death.

THE REAL JUNIUS.

Extract of a letter from H. Campbell, esq. F. A. S. to a clergyman in Oxford.

London, Sulfolk st. March 9.

"You will have seen by the public prints, that the will of the late Sir Philip Francis, is totally void of any clue that would lead to the discovery of the real author of "The Letters of Junius." Though his testy answer to Mr. Rogers when interrogated on the subject of that gentleman, at Lord Holland's, makes it evident to the world that he particularly wished to have been considered the celebrated author. Hence you will infer, that the Edinburgh Reviewers, tho' passable critics, have not yet attained the second sight, so peculiar to their countrymen, less gifted with the glamoury of metaphysics than they are.

"To be brief with my reverend friend, I hasten to acquaint him that the university of Oxford has the honour of having given to the world that high priest of political scrutiny, Junius, in one of her greatest ornaments of oratory—and deep literature—the late Doctor Wilmot—& that he was consecrated by England's once illustrious prime minister, Lord Chatham, and by Lords Sondes and Archer, at whose house several of his celebrated letters were written, and thence conveyed to Mr. Wilkes', who communicated them to Woodsfall the printer. This, my dear sir, is not fancy. The fac-similes of Woodfall and Hessey, & Taylor are now before me, contrasted with MSS. of the late Dr. Wilmot—and there is not, nor cannot be a shadow of doubt, but the same hand traced the characters.

"If there could be any doubt for a moment entertained of the fact, it would entirely be done away by the signature of Lord Chatham to one of the papers now before me, wherein that illustrious statesman promises "to indemnify Doctor Wilmot for any losses he may incur, by publishing his Political Essays;" and farther, by the death bed avowal of the Doctor himself, declaring in the most so-solemn and feeling manner that "he (Dr. Wlimot) only was the author of the letters at issue!" The paper was then sealed and delivered to his amiable niece (a daughter of the late Duke of Cumberland, his friend) with strict injunctions that she was not to open it till seven years after his death; which I need not add, was faithfully attended to. On the whole, the comparison of the MSS. in the possession of Woodfall, and that of the "Heroic Epistle to Sir William Chambers," now in possession of Sir Richard Philips, and those in the possession of his niece, incontrovertibly assert that Doctor Wilmot was the author of the works in question. The absurdity of the claims of the adherents and sticklers of Sir P. Francis, to place him in the chair of Junius, is so palpable, that I wonder how any person who has attentively read the letters of that author, could for a moment hesitate to pronounce him one of the most unlikely men to produce such writings, or to whom such writings should be ascribed! The knight was only 22[*] years old when the letters first appeared, and the Doctor was 51! The pointed elegance & acumen of his nervous style had been 20 years a subject of admiration at the university: and he had long been to Mr. Pitt and others what Dean Swift is reported to have been to Harley, earl of Oxford. To me every sentence of the celebrated letters pourtray their emanation from a comprehensive, deep, enlightened and well matured mind—not the mind of a clerk of 22, when the flare and frivolties of youth are often more attended to than the expansion of intellect; and such I have been told was really the case of Sir Philip Francis at that age.

"The limits of my paper will not allow me at present to cite extracts from the letters of lord Chatham & his colleagues, to the Doctor; but I might do so, and they would convince—such a chain of unquestionable evidence I never before saw.

"With an elegance of person the Doctor possessed the easy politeness of a courtier, and, with the assistance of his intriguing friend, Harry Beauclerk, he, like the great lord Stair, when ambassador in France, turned appearance and manners to advantage. On laying aside the clerical costume, and assuming the bag and sword, he was par finesse introduced by Beauclerk to the celebrated Mrs. Abingdon, the then mistress of lord Shelburne; and through his intimacy with that lady, he acquired a knowledge of the private views and transactions of lord S—, that was useful to him while before the public as Junius.

"I could recite what would fill a volume, of the court transactions of those and later times, but I find that I have written to the end of my paper. However, you may place the firmest reliance in what I have written from the proofs before me, that Dr. Wilmot, and no other man on earth, wrote "The letters of Junius."

"And that I am, Rev. & Dear Sir, very faithfully yours, Credat Judaes Apella."

H. CAMPBELL.

THE ONTARIO.

We have succeeded in ascertaining the following particulars, respecting the late very interesting cruise of this national ship. The commissioners of the Vice King of Peru, who went in the Ontario to Valparaiso, having ascertained that the State of Chili would not treat with him, returned in the Ontario to Lima. From Lima, the Ontario sailed for the N. W. coast of America, and in 49 days she anchored in 14 fathom water off the river Columbia; of which each shore was taken possession in the name of the U. S. of America.

After watering at a Spanish settlement in California, the Ontario returned to Lima, where the officers and crew were treated in the most hospitable manner.—From Lima the Ontario sailed for Valparaiso. On her arrival, Lord Cochran manifested a disposition to insist upon the Ontario paying his ship the compliment of a salute. To effect this, Lord Cochran took measures to get his fleet (the Chilian fleet) consisting of 3 frigates and a sloop of war to prevent the sailing of the Ontario. He stationed the San Martin of 64 guns, off the harbor, and a smaller vessel of 20 guns along side the Ontario. Notwithstanding all these preparations, the Ontario took in her wood, water and provisions, and when ready, sailed, passing the San Martin at a distance of three-fourths of a mile. She & the smaller vessel got under weigh, immediately on perceiving the Ontario make sail. After about two hours the Ontario had left the Chilian ships about 4 miles astern, when they gave up the pursuit.—

EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS OF THE PATRIOTS.

Capture of Lima without bloodshed by the Patriots, and mutiny of the Royal Spanish fleet destined thither.

The Philadelphia Gazette of Saturday last, contains the following sxtract of a letter from 'St. Thomas, March 30,' being the latest dates received from the West Indies.

"By a vessel just arrived from Curacoa, news had been received by a vessel arrived there from Carthagena, that the Governor of Panama had written to the Governor of Carthagena, for all the forces he could muster for his succour, as he dreaded an instant attack from the Independent army, which after having taken Lima, was then advancing rapidly to the northward no doubt to attack his post. It is also stated that of the fleet which some time ago sailed from Spain for Peru, the crew of one vessel had mutined, and carried her into Valparaiso; giving information that the rest of the squadron were in a similar state.—On receiving these accounts the government of Valparaiso immediately despatched the same vessel, together with the rest of the squadron then in port, to intercept them, which they accordingly effected; and after exchanging a few shot, the whole Spanish fleet joined them. They immediately proceeded to Callao, under the Spanish flag, forwarded the despatches, taken on board the squadron, to the Viceroy, and debarked the whole of their forces, which were received with every demonstration of joy. They immediately set out for Lima, and took peacible possession of the city, the government supposing them to be friends."

The capture of Lima, the metropolis of Peru, and the intended movement from thence, on the Pacific coast, towards the Panama, or famous isthmus of Darien, are operations which if conducted with common prudence by the patriots will be crowned with complete success. The occasional reverses of the Patriots on the Venezuelian coast of the Atlantic, are thus amply counterbalanced by their victorious career on the Pacific.

Captain Whitmarsh, in 20 days from Curacoa, arrived at New-York on the 22d April, informs that about an hour before he sailed, information was received by a Dutch government schooner, that Laguira was blockaded by a squadron under admiral Brion's flag, an embargo was lain on all vessels at that place and Porto Cavello in consequence of the appearance on the coast of the Patriot squadron.—It was also reported that the Royalists had recently been several times defeated on the Main.

The city of Bonn has made suitable preparations for the accommodation of a great number of students. In the course of this spring 500 students are expected, among whom will be several German princes The chief rectorship of the flourishing university in that city, is conducted by Professor Hullmann, whose superintendence secures harmony and usefulness. Frederick Wilhelm, the enlightened king of Prussia, spares no pains to exalt the character and promote the usefulness of the Rhenish University. The learned Professors are divided into committees for extra scientific purpoes. Professors E. M. Arndt, and Von Schlegel conduct the historical annals of the institution. Heinrick, Von Schlegel and Noggerath, are appointed to examine and appriase the celebrated collection of artificial and natural curiosities, ancient coins, manuscripts, incunables, &c. belonging to Canonicus Pick. This collection will be purchased for the university, at the valuation of the Professsors. Delbruck and others are engaged in arranging and securing specimens of art, (restored after the conquest of Paris,) ancient German manuscripts, pataeotypic monuments, &c.—Chemical, medical and philisophical subjects are referred to Kaster, Nees Von Ehrenbeck, Goldfuss, Harless, Windischmann, Nake, &c. Upwards of 20,000 vols. are already on the shelves of the library. The library of the late Millin of Paris, and a very valuable and celebrated library in Switzerland will probably be added in a short time. Several intelligent booksellers have been established at Bonn, and are assiduously engaged in augmenting and improving the university library. With unusual promptitude they deliver per order, German, French, Italian and other works, and Kapferberg of Mayence has established an extensive type foundery. Frederick Kusmann and Son, of Dresden, have invented several curious instruments, which astonish and delight every hearer. They are Harmouichord, (peculiarly calculated for vocal accompaniment,) the Chordaulodian, the Trumpet Automater, and the Belloneon.

Presence of Mind.—Before the completion of the Cathedral of St. Paul in London, Sir James Thornhill was employed in the painting of the celebrated Whispering Gallery, a circular gallery of immense height from the pavement under the dome. The iron ballustrades, by which it was since rendered a promenade of safety, had not then been erected.—One day as he was painting in all the fervor of imagination, and with exclusive attention to his work, he retired step by step to examine the effect; at length the retrogade motion brought one of his heels partly over the edge of the gallery, and he was preparing to make another step backward, which must inevitably have been fatal, when his assistant observed his perilous situation, and with admirable presence of mind, instead of calling to Sir James to inform him of his danger, rushed immediately to the picture and destroyed by daubing and defacing the object of his adoration; Sir James in a fury of passion instantly rushed forward, with violent imprecations, on his assistant, till he found that by the annihilation of a few renewable beauties, his life had been saved from otherwise assured destruction.

PITTSBURGH.

Tuesday, May 11, 1819.

The 6th regiment U. S. Infantry, commanded by Col. Atkinson, dropped down the river on Saturday in boats, in a very handsome style; destined for the Yellow Stone. It is a remarkably fine looking regiment; and seems in every respect calculated to encounter the perils & hardships of this interesting service.

We shall in our next begin the publication of Mr. Baldwin's Speech, in the case of General Jackson. It is universally allowed to be the ablest production that was offered on that side of the question during the whole session. At the same time that we feel delighted at our district's taking a respectable stand, in the councils of the nation, we cannot forbear expressing our satisfaction that the first important display of the energetic, argumentative powers of our representative, has been emphatically in the defence of Mr. Monroe's administration; the impression left by his acute reasoning is still more enhanced, when we find that our General, was by it, successfully defended, on his own ground, without recurring to the aid of sophistry of any kind.

An article of news from the Mediterranean states, that owing to the improvement in Mills, and more particularly to the quantity of grain raised in the Levant there is not now, and probably will not in future be any important demand for American productions! this is what we predicted one year ago, and although the anticipation has been realized sooner than we expected, we conceive there is nothing in the circumstance but what common policy might have foreseen. What have the opponents of American manufactures to offer now? what has become of their unintelligible jargon, about political economy, drawn from books? books which by the way were never written but for the meridian of Old England! Our produce will not sell: are we to wait until it suits the caprice of Great Britain to beckon us to her coasts? As long as her new colonies, the Ionian Isles, (the finest grain country in the world) can supply her, she certainly will not apply to our western and middle states for provision; and while the East Indies, and probably at no very distant day, South America, is able to raise such quantities of cotton and sugar, our Nabobs to the south cannot cherish the splendid anticipations which have heretofore rendered them deaf to the interests and welfare of every other section of the union. We have lately heard of an express being sent over land to India for the purpose of stopping the exportation of cotton from that immense country; is it possible that in so short a time after the embargo, that unfortunate measure for our planters, cotton should have become so important an article of agriculture in the Peninsula? The melancholy truth is at length unfolded; the golden dreams of the Carolinas and Mississippi have vanished; to continue a demand for their produce, they must co-operate in creating a home consumption for it. Without a demand for our produce in England how are we to pay for our imports from that country? and with all Europe at peace, and with the genius of enterprize and enlightened policy hovering over and just about alighting on her territory, is it likely that more prosperous days for making us an exclusively agricultural country, will dawn upon us? We see nothing in the present state of affairs, to justify the presumption. It appears to us indeed that in a short time we shall be forced into measures beneficial for us; why not prudently adopt these measures while we have the means of putting them in operation with some efficiency? It has been proved by the late investigation into the affairs of the Bank of the United States, that in about 12 or 14 months, this institution must have lost upwards of seven millions of specie; when with all its credit and popularity then, this bank suffered such a drain last year, is it reasonable that it will be treated much more leniently the next year; if the loss of specie continues in the same proportion for 10 months, it must necessarily disappear entirely, for the amount in the U. States now is not sufficient to replace what has been taken from the U. S. Bank. Without specie, and without a demand for our agricultural products how are we to pay Great Britain for her manufactures? the thing is impossible; we cannot expect that she will in future solicit our custom, at the risk of great loss; in short, we cannot expect to be trusted. England actually gains a greater field for the consumption of her articles by the present state of Europe, than she would lose by a deprivation of our custom, and it is very probable that in a short time South America will be added to the catalogue of her dependants.

England became great and powerful by trading with a population, & revolving in a circle much more limited in extent, climate, and productiveness than is contained within the bounds of the U. S. Wealth is certainly not exclusively the precious metals; it is the ability to procure every thing we want in exchange for those articles which we raise, and for which we have no use. Under this position view the U. States; it embraces the productions of more than 14 degrees of latitude; the intercourse between its cities is speedy and safe, and the finest rivers in the world penetrate into the interior, from both sides. With these advantages inviting us on to greatness on one side, and with the numerous embarrassments, which are now rising around us from our present course of conduct, how can our great men hesitate? can reason suggest the thinness of our population? Must we wait until the wilds of Arkanza, until the unknown regions on the Pacific are as thickly populated as China? as well might our economists contend that Great Britain ought to stop the looms of Manchester until she had advanced her Canadian population to Lake Wineepec. It is time to explode this book doctrine. We in this district, have opened our eyes to our real interests; we have entrusted the direction of our destinies to a man of talents, who besides is a practical man; his exertions are pledged to us, and Henry Baldwin is not a man to flinch from his duty. We have a right to expect the cooperation of the whole west. On this subject we may occasionally offer a few of our ideas; they may appear novel, but it is an acknowledged fact that there is no science in which more erroneous principles have been received, than political economy.

FOR THE GAZETTE.

Circus.

THE arrival of Mr. West and his company of equestrians has tended, not a little, to enliven the dullness of our city, and to brighten, in some measure, our scenes which "hard times" have lately made so gloomy. Indeed, we must hail this corps with infinite pleasure, when we look back and reflect how Pittsburgh has been gulled with performances of every kind, since the visit of Mr. Pepin.—But, we believe, the celebrity of the present company is too well known to our citizens, to suffer them to doubt the excellence of their performance, or allow them to harbour, for a moment, an idea that they will fail in their attempt to please.

The acting of Mr. Yeaman forcibly recalls to our recollection the graceful and elegant performance of Messrs. Pepin and Cayetano—though as yet he has done nothing that may be viewed as surpassing our first visitors, we anticipate, from the many encomiums that have been heaped upon him, both in Europe and America, a delectable treat in his profession, and hope, that while he studies to retain the applause he has gained elsewhere, he will not be neglected here.

The performances of Mesdames Williams and Dupree, are to us as novel as they are interesting and admirable, and shew, that though men may rise to the acme of this profession, women "lag not far behind." We could almost view them as prodigies; in short, while we wish them success, we cannot forbear offering our meed of applause for the exquisite grace and agility of their manner.

From what little we have seen of Mr. Williams, (clown) we discover him to possess superior powers. His apparent ease and carlessness evince that he is a proficient. As to his budget of fun, we would rather he would open it a little more, as we are fond of grinning.

We need hardly mention that the beauty and elegance of the horses of Mr. West, combined with their astonishing sagacity and knowledge, are in themselves, sufficient to attract a crowded audience.—May the enterprize of the manager in crossing the "back bone" of America, to amuse and delight "the natives," be rewarded with full houses, and may the boxes each night be filled with accomplishment and BEAUTY.

NEWBURYPORT, [Mass.] April 20.

Arrived, brig Packet, Campbell, 33 days from Figuera. Captain Campbell remarks that in latitude 42, longitude 49, he fell in with one of the most astonishing bodies of ice he had ever seen or heard of. He judged it 1 1-2 miles in circumference, being 400 feet above the surface of the water, and perfectly white—he did not loose sight of it till night. The change of air, in its neighbourhood, gave sufficient warning of its approach to the mariner.

From the N. Y. Spectator.

VERY LATE FROM EUROPE.

The Ghent Journal affirms that the Generals Regaud and Grouchy, are on the eve of returning from America to France.

His Excellency M. Latour Mabourg, is appointed French minister to the court of London.

The celebrated M. de Kotzebue was assassinated by a student at Meinheim on the 23d of March; and the latter immediately committed suicide with the same poignard which had been the instrument of his crime.—Both instantly expired.

A Liverpool paper comments, with much severity, on the flattering reception with which General Jackson was received at New-York.

In mentioning the decision of the House of Representatives on the report of the select committee, the London times observes—"The question, however, is merely determined between Mr. Jackson and the United States; their votes cannot bind or conclude Great Britain; and the pleadings of her government, and the sentence of her parliament, are still to be laid before the world."

A person who left Cadiz on the 13th ult. and who is now in Paris, has communicated the following details relative to the expedition about to be sent to Buenos Ayres:—

"The number of troops is about thirteen thousand, including infantry and cavalry, and already occupy their cantonments, in the neighbourhood of that port. Count d'Abisbal (O'Donnell) who commands in chief, and who is appointed viceroy of Buenos Ayres, assembled in Cadiz 15,000 on the 28th of January last, the day appointed to celebrated the interment of her majesty the late queen. He reviewed them in the presence of a considerable body of spectators, which encreased the splendor of ceremony, and who all admired the fine equipment and steady dicipline of the troops. All the generals who are attached to the expedition are at this moment assembled in Cadiz. General O'Donnell is incessantly occupied in enforcing every precaution necessary to accelerate its departure, called to such an important destiny, and which will, without doubt, be the finest that ever left the ports of Spain.—The troops are animated with the best spirit, and every thing excites the most pleasing hopes.

The death of Mr. Park, the enterprizing traveller in the interior of Africa, seems now to be placed beyond a doubt. The following information of that event corroborates, in part, the statement given by Amadi Fatouma, who was despatched in quest of Park from the Gambria, some years since; but is at varience with the circumstances attending it. Mr. Bowditch, who conducted a successful mission from Cape Coast Castle to the King of the Ashantees, obtained, while at Coomassie, the summer before last, the following account, during one of his visits to Baba, the chief of the Moors. A Moor, who had just come from Tombuctoo, was sent for the purpose of seeing Mr. Bowdich, and who did not express the surprise that was expected on seeing a white man, and accounted for it from having before seen three white men at Boussa. This naturally created a desire of being informed of the particulars, and Baba interpreted to Mr. Bowditch the following relation which the Moor gave:—"That some years ago a vessel, with masts, suddenly appeared on Quolla, or Niger, near Boussa, with three white men, and some black. The natives encouraged by these strange men, took off provisions for sale, were well paid, and received presents besides; it seems that the vessel had anchored. Next day, perceiving the vessel going on, the natives hurried after her, the (Moor protesting, from their anxiety to save her from sunken rocks with which the Quolla abounds;) but the white men mistaking, and thinking they pursued for a bad purpose, deterred them.—The vessel soon after struck; the men jumped into the water and tried to swim, but could not for the current, and were drowned. He thought some of their clothes were now at Wanwaw, but did not believe there were any books or papers."

The following is a curious Order of the Day issued by Bonaparte, when First Consul, on the occasion of an act of suicide committed by a horse grenedier:

Extract from the Orderly Book of the Horse grenadiers of the Consular Guard.

Order of the 22d Floreal, (10 years.)

The Grenadier Groblin has destroyed himself in consequence of a love affair. He was otherwise a respectable man. This is the second event of the kind which has happened in the corps within a month.

The First Consul has directed that it shall be inserted in the Order of the Day of the Guard, that a Soldier ought to know how to subdue sorrow and the agitation of the passions; there is as much courage in enduring with firmness the pains of the heart as in remaining steady under the grape shot of a battery. To abandon one's self to grief without resistance, to kill one's self in order to escape from it, is to fly from the field of battle before one is conquered.

BONAPARTE, First Consul.

A true Copy, BESSIERES.

Animal Affection and Gratitude..—A party of a ship's crew being sent ashore on a part of the coasts of India, for the purpose of cutting wood for the ship, one of the men, having strayed from the rest, was greatly frightened by the appearance of a large lioness, which made towards him; but on her coming to him she lay down at his feet, and looked very earnest first at him, and then at a tree a little distance off. After repeating her looks several times she arose, and proceeded on towards the tree, looking back several times, seemingly wishing the man to follow her, which he did; and, upon coming to the tree he looked up, and perceived a huge baboon, with two young cubs in his arms, which he supposed were the lioness', as she crouched down like a cat, and seemed to eye them very stedfastly; upon which, the man being afraid to ascend the tree, bethought himself to cut the tree down; and, having his axe with him, he set to work, when the lioness seemed more attentive to what he was doing; and, upon the tree falling, she sprung forward on the baboon, and after tearing him to pieces, she turned round and licked the cubs over and over again; after which she turned to the man, who was greatly frightened at seeing her in such a rage with the baboon; but she came and fawned round him, rubbing her head against him in great fondness, and which seemed to show her gratitude for the services which he had done her; she then went to the cubs, and taking one of them in her mouth, went away with it; and, returning soon afterwards for the other, she went away with that also; when the man made the best of his way off to the shore, where he was taken onboard, and did not get rid of his fright for some time after.

Extraordinary efforts are making throughout France to reclaim the people from the infidelity which had been among the most unfortunate results of the various ephemeral governments of the revolution, who seemed to agree in nothing but their hatred to christianity.

The morality of the Gospel, preached in spirit of charity, with an enlightened zeal, free from prejudice and fanaticism, will always be productive of salutary effects. In several parts crowds of people who have wandered in the mazes of error, have been again restored to the bosom of the church, & have renewed their baptismal vows with sentiments of the deepest contrition and penitence. On one of these occasions, at Toulouse many persons who had been present, from mere curiosity, were so effected that they also became converted, declaring that they could not withstand those superhuman efforts of the missionaries.

REMOVAL.

J. BYRNE,

UMBRELLA MAKER,

GRATEFUL for past, and solicitous of future favours, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has removed from Diamond alley to Third street, between Wood and Market, on the north side, and a few doors above the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, where he will be happy to execute any commands in his line of profession, with which he may be favoured. Umberellas and Parasols made and repaired with neatness and despatch—Gentlemen's Canes varnished and mounted—Old and faded silk Umbrellas oiled and varnished, so that they will never admit a drop of rain; the attenuating quality of the varnish strengthens the silk, renews its appearance and promotes at once its utility, durability and beauty. As a number of Umbrellas have been left with him for an unreasonable length of time, he gives this last notice, that unless they be immediately called for, he will be obliged to sell them to defray, as far as they will, his expence and trouble. This cannot be thought hard after laying out of his money and price of labour for three, six, nine and twelve months, and even for three years, as some of them have actually been lying by him for even more than that length of time—A record shall be kept of the sale and the proceeds accounted for to the original owners—any surplus after paying expence and trouble, will be refunded, and for any deficiency they will be held responsible.

J. B. has on hand, a handsome assortment of elegant and fashionable which he will dispose of at very low prices, either by wholesale or retail. Travelling dealers are invited to call.

He has just now ready for delivery a quantity of his much celebrated Japan Varnish Blacking, for boots, shoes, carriage harnessing, ladies morrocco shoes, etc. peculiarly adapted to the season, This inestimable composition, unrivalled for its excellence as well as being greatly beneficial to the leather, produces the most beautiful and shining jet black ever beheld. It is not subject to turn fœted as many other compositions do; it is suited to all climes and seasons, and when polished, will not soil the finest linen, its emolient properties render the leather soft and pliant, and its price will be trebly repaid in comfortable durability imparted to the leather, by the lubricating quality of the varnish. It is put up in stone Jars, at 50 cents each.

FOR SALE, ALSO

so much famed all over Europe and America.

BOTTLED PORTER, ALE & CIDER,

of a superior quality, sold wholesale and retail.

WM & JOHN HILL

Pittsburgh, July 15 2awt

PATENT GAS FIRE,

FOR STEAM BOAT.

A CONCENTRATED FUEL for Steam Boats has been invented, consisting of Ta or other carbonaceous substance, commingled with Steam,

The apparatus is simple; the management ea and safe. It is a great auxiliary to a wood or coal fire, which it both enlivens, encreases and saves —for it seems to combine so rapidly with the oxygen of the air, as to prevent the wood from wasting or consuming so fast as usual, the blaze, notwithstanding, being very active and intense.

The apparatus consists of a double vessel of copper or iron, cylindrical, lying on its side, upon or rather between the boilers, if there are 2.

Tar, Turpentine, Rosin, Spirits, Oil, or other combustible fluid, being put into the inner one, steam is allowed to flow from the boiler through a pipe and cock into the space between and thro' a few holes on the upper side of the inner one to press on the surface of the tar, which being heated by the surrounding steam, is at pleasure driven out through a small pipe (having a stop cock) meeting and uniting with another pipe leading out steam from the space between—the continuation of the pipe then leads to the fire or flue. The longer this pipe (if kept hot) the better. It need not be more than a quarter of an inch in diameter.

In its way the tar is extremely attenuated and mingling with the steam. Some chemists are of opinion that by the attraction of its carbon, it decomposes the steam into the constituents of water, oxygen and hydrogen, and combines with them to form the highly inflamable Gasses, carbonic-acid and carburetted hydrogen, or if not thus formed in the pipe, they are produced at or near its orifice, which need not be more than the tenth of an inch diameter for a boiler of considerable size.

The only art in management, is to graduate the flow of the tar and steam to such proportion as that neither shall appear to predominate, and in taking care that the fluid be previously strained so as not to obstruct the pipe by any extraneous particles. This will easily be done by placing a seive over the reservoir, from which a pipe (having a stop cock) leads into one end of the tar vessel. There is of course a safety valve and a stop cock to draw the condensed steam from between the two vessels, formed there in the beginning of the operation, while the tar was at a low temperature. Its position on the boilers will, however soon heat it. Tar boils only at a much higher temperature than water—there is therefore no danger from it.

The advantages of this kind of fuel will be very great in long passages. No steam boat or vessel can navigate the Ocean without it; and it will be found economical and convenient in every situation.

Being of recent origin, it has not been put in practice in many instances, but in several, under my own observation, and witnessed by many persons, its effects are admirable.

This advertisement is intended to offer its use gratis to a few boats, whose proprietors shall first obtain a licence. The price of this improvement afterwards will be several thousand dollars per boat, which it will be found economical in most situations to pay. The patent right for local use will be for sale after its value shall be further tested.

Licences to use this invention will be granted by

JOHN L. SULLIVAN,
Assignee of the patent of Samuel Morey,

Boston, February 19, 1819.
